PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

Human Development Major

Within the Department of Human Development and Psychoeducational Studies (HDPES), Human Development majors learn the interdisciplinary approaches to study and promote the development of human beings from conception and birth through childhood, adulthood, aging, and death. Faculty within the department ensure students are culturally responsive to social justice issues by teaching them to examine how people and communities can be empowered in diverse and marginalized settings.

Honors Program

Human Development students are invited by faculty to be admitted into the honors program after their first semester at Howard University. Applicants must maintain a 3.5 cumulative GPA throughout their matriculation to earn the honors designation on their diploma.
